YOU'LL SURE WANT TO TRY HIS, UNCLE PUDGY!

Treasure Hunt

It was a typical cool fall afternoon, and Mippy and Miffy Mouse found themselves at the sea shore, romping in the sand. Oh, they weren't thinking of going swimming — it was much too cold for that. The two little mice were quite content with building castles, playing tag or just running through the soft white sand.

Suddenly, Mippy stopped running, something floating out in the water had attracted his attention.

"Hey, Miffy," he called to his playmate, "doesn't that look like a bottle out there?"

Miffy Mouse cupped his paw over his forehead and stared out toward where Mippy was pointing. A small bright object bobbing up and down in the waves caught his eye.

"It does look like a bottle," Miffy replied, "and there seems to be something in it, something white — like a piece of paper."

"Gosh, maybe it's a note telling where somebody's treasure is buried," said Mippy excitedly. "I've read lots of stories about pirate captains who buried their treasure, then drew tiny maps of where to find it and put them in bottles which they threw into the sea."

"Do you really think that bottle floating out there might have one of those notes in it?" Miffy asked.

"There's only one way to find out," commented Mippy, who had noticed that the tide was pushing the bottle closer and closer to shore.

Losing no time, Mippy Mouse dashed down the beach a short way and returned seconds later with a long piece of driftwood. As the bottle came near the shore he reached out with the piece of wood and pulled it towards him.

"Okay, Miffy, grab it," he said to his little friend. Miffy leaned over the edge of the water — almost slipped and fell in — but managed to come up with the bottle clenched tightly in his eager little paw. Together the two mice pulled the cork out of the bottle then took out the small piece of note paper that was crumpled inside.

Mippy Mouse read aloud what was written on it:

"Directions for finding buried treasure. Please follow carefully. Start at oak tree at Woodville Junction. Take 10 paces north, then 5 paces west. Stop at the first large rock. Treasure is buried under rock. Signed, Captain Kid."

"Yippee," shouted Miffy Mouse joyfully. "We're rich, we're rich. All we have to do is follow the directions on that note, and the treasure will be ours."

"I can hardly believe it," Mippy breathed excitedly. "Hey, c'mon. We'd better get started."

The two little pals scampered toward their houses, and busily made preparations for the treasure hunt. They gathered whatever tools they felt they might need to dig — picks, shovels, crowbars — and they put on boots so they would feel like pirates. Miffy joined Mippy at Mippy's house, and they set out for Woodville Junction, ready to claim the treasure.

As the two fortunate hunters trudged toward the starting point, they heard voices up the road ahead of them.

"Now remember," said Mippy to Miffy, "don't breathe a word of what we're up to. We've got to keep this a complete secret from all our friends."

"Don't worry," answered Miffy. "Mum's the word."

As Mippy had suspected, the voices they had heard belonged to three of their friends, who were coming toward them, Skippy Rabbit, Chippie Chipmunk and Freddie Fox.

"Hey, where are you going with all that stuff?" asked Freddie Fox.

"Can we come, too?" chipped Chippy Chipmunk, who was always ready for anything.

But Mippy and Miffy weren't saying anything. They just looked at one another, and at their friends, and shook their heads.

Of course, by their silence, the three little friends thought of all kinds of exciting things that the mice might be going to do. But the two mice just kept walking along, straining under the load of tools they were carrying, not saying a word.

"Aw, c'mon, tell us where you're going," pleaded Skippy Rabbit in a plaintive little voice.

"Yeah, tell us," echoed Freddie Fox. After all, what are friends for if not to share fun and excitement with?"

By this time the five little animals had almost reached the old oak tree.

"What shall we do?" whispered Miffy to Mippy. "They're still following us."

"I don't know," answered Mippy, who had slowed down the pace. "Maybe we should tell them where we're going and what we're going to do. They are our friends; we should share our good fortune with them, and besides, we could sure use their help with the digging. Who knows how deep that treasure is buried?"

"I guess you're right," said Miffy. "Let's tell them."

In the meantime, Freddie, Skippy and Chip-pie were having a little conversation of their own. "Maybe they're going to dig for some buried treasure," offered Freddie Fox.

"Don't be silly," scoffed Skippy the Rabbit. "In this day and age, no one goes digging for anything but clams. Nobody believes in that buried treasure bunk anymore."

"That's what they're going to do," squealed Chippie Chipmunk excitedly, "dig for clams." "Aren't you silly!" laughed Freddie Fox. "Skippy just said that for a laugh. What on earth would mice want with clams?"

Chippie realized how silly he must have sounded, and he, along with the rabbit and the fox, had a good laugh.

At the sound of the laughter, Mippy and Miffy turned toward their friends and walked the short distance which separated them.

"What's so funny?" asked Mippy.

"Oh nothing much, I guess," answered Skippy. "We were just trying to guess what you were going to do and we got kind of silly about it."

"Well, let me tell you that it isn't so funny," Miffy said. "We found a treasure map in the water down at the beach and we're going to dig it up. Would you like to help us?"

"Would we?" screamed the three little animals together. "Of course, we would."

The five friends had started walking again, and as they walked, Mippy and Miffy told the others of the map and what it said.

"We don't know what we'll find, but whatever it is we'll share it equally," concluded Mippy.

By this time, the treasure hunters had reached the old oak tree.

"This is the place to begin," said Skippy Rabbit excitedly. "I'll start digging here, and he pointed to a spot under the tree.

"Wait a minute, wait a minute; the map says the treasure is buried under a rock," said Freddie.

"You're right," said Miffy, "and that must be it over there."

And sure enough there was a big rock on the other side of the oak tree.

It took the strength of all five animals to move that rock, but finally it did move.

"There doesn't seem to be anything there," said Miffy in a disappointed sounding voice.

"Don't sound so sad, Miffy," said Freddie. "We'll probably have to dig for this treasure."

The little animals all pitched in and soon they had dug a deep hole. Suddenly Mippy shouted, "I see something shiny. It's the treasure, it's the treasure!"

"Hooray, hooray," shouted the others.

"Let's find out what it is," said Skippy Rabbit anxiously.

But when the little friends peered into the hole, they were very disappointed; for all they saw was a pile of old tin cans.

"This is treasure?" asked Miffy.

Suddenly a voice from the bushes said, "Yes, it certainly is — to a goat."

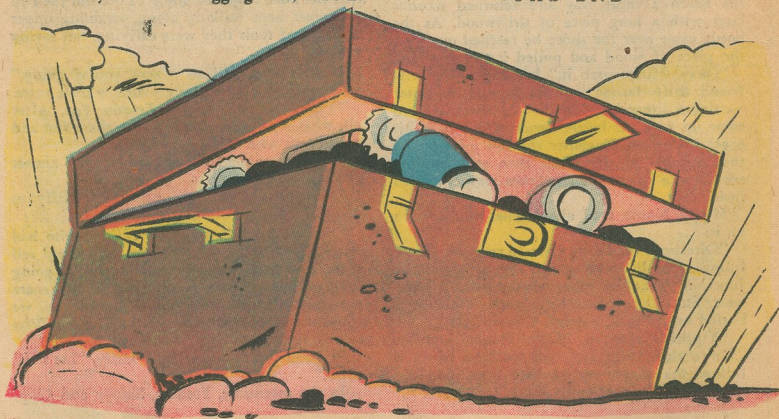

"It's young Bill Goat," said Chippie Chipmunk.

"Yes, it's me," answered Bill. "I threw that bottle that you found into the ocean, when I was 'just a kid' and forgot all about it until now. I don't know how to thank you for finding my 'buried treasure.'"

The five little animals lost their disappointment quickly and began to laugh.

"Oh, that's O. K.," said Mippy. "We had fun doing it, and it was exciting, too."
